LARGE CONCRETE BRIDGE AS BUILT UNDER TENT .y enclosing the entire work in tent, a concrete bridge over the Little Goose river in Sheridan county, Wyoming, was constructed during the winter months. The work is described in Concrete in Architecture and Engineering, which is thus quoted to Engineering and Contract

"Weather conditions last win ter in that part of the country were the most severe enroun tered in many years, but b cause the highway, of which othis bridge formed a link, is a very important one, the state highway department saw the need of completing the bridge so that the road between Sheridan and Dietz might be opened early in 1920 for the heary Old January, 'tother one, farm hauling prevailing in that section. Construction work was started in the fall of 1919, and forms for the three spans erected. Before any concrete was placed, a large tent was set up over the entire structure site and fires kept going in the enclosure in stoves with smoke outlets through the top of the tent. Aggregates and mixing water were heated. During the progress of the work a snow storm followed by severe cold lasting several days, tested the effectiveness of the tent. The housing proved equal to the emergency, however, and there was no particular difficulty in row structures by housing it successive sections."
