was not as high as contractors and others paid. Unskilled labor in the summer of 1919 was paid on an average of 80 cents an hour in Manchester but this increase was not granted the town employees.

Some time ago a reduction of five cents an hour became affective for unskilled labor employed in the highway department of the town. This reduction does not conform with the scale recently adopted by general the scale recently adopted by general contractors who have agreed on a scale of wages ranging between 30 would pale in comparison.
