lovely archipelago inhabited by the brown Polynesians, serenely primitive in its native life, it today the world's greatest experiment station in race-mix-tures. Here Orient and Occident meet; here North America and Siberia and antipodes touch; here a current of Latin blood crosses a current of Teuton; Angle-Saxon and Asiatic, Malay and Micronesian, Slav and scandinavian, mingle and in

The least "fusible" are Japanese and Koreans. Others intermarry freely with the Polynesian stocks and with each other. And the marriage with Polynesians is fruitful of good results. A valuable contribution to humankind has been made by the Hawaiian natives, who, while disappearing before the inexorable impact of a civilization sterner than their own, have bequeathed to the new citizenship of the islands many of their own kindly and attrac-tive qualities. The fullblooded Hawaiians are disappearing, bu those of all other degrees of blood, from half-Hawalian down, are increasing, and the Caucasian-Hawaitan, Chinese-Hawallan, and Portuguese-Hawallan are largely represented in the vigorous young citizenship of today.

Even those races such as the Japanese, which in the first and second generations of life in Hawaii have not readily fused with other races, are changing in type. The thirdgeneration Japanese boy and girl in Hawall are likely to be of an ampier mold than the grandfather and grandmother from the hardworn soil of the mikade's empire. The descendants are taller, straighter of imb; their more rounded outlines and heavier bodies testifying to the beneficial effects which Hawail's equable, generous climate, and Hawaii's far better living conditions, exercise on the offspring of immigrants.

Small Town Best.

We rarely hear of a person going hungry or without occupation in a country town. Sleep, which is the great restorer of vigor, is profound and indisturbed during the hours of darkness in the small town, whereas the bunder of traffic and the eternal movements of fellow lodgers in crowded city districts make night hideous and sleep a nightmare.

From a physical and spiritual standpoint humanity in the small town is exempt from many of the misery producing elements of the large city.
