"I Will Put My Insurance In Trust"

W/HEN a certain business man died about two years ago, hi swife received a considerasum of insurance money. Knowing little about investments. she consulted her brother. He recommended that she purchase stock in the company of which he was president.

Last year the business went into the hands of a receiver. The widow's income has ceased, and her principal is practically lost. Such cases as this point the moral that it is often as essential to provide for the future protection of insurance money as it is to pay the premiums.

One of the many important services rendered by trust companies is the care of life insurance. Trust companies are today the trustees for many millions of dollars of in-
