CANDIDATE PAID
HIGH FOR DEFEAT

MARTIN FERRY Man's
Picture Included Son Lent
and Handshakes

MARTIN FERRY, Sept. 13—Charles "Tobie" Barr, defeated at the recent primaries for Councilman here, in filing his expense account of $1,000 for his campaign, upon which he spent $1,000. This played a meticulous honesty sometimes lacking in those who attain high office. Perhaps that's why he lost. Anyhow, it is his statement: "I did my best."

RECEIPTS:

Seven handshakes wishing me luck (but the primary).

Fourteen tenders of sympathy upon being defeated (after the primary).

Four pieces of advice not to run for office again.

One set of candidates' cards (one was given to me).

One bowing out from Friend.

One wife for mixing up in politics.

Two bowings out from same for losing.

No answer when votes were counted.

Eight invitations to take a drink—of pinger air. All accepted.

One degree—30 below—lost by 20 votes.

EXTRAHEDGES:

One-half of per cent of year's salary which paid—

Two half-sizes of short leather writing after a week.

One bowing out wear and tear on vocal chords—amount undetermined.

One degree work-on-electric day (for which I was not asked on my job).

Quite a lot of proficiency on learning English.

All my surplus energy canvassing the world.

Two sets lead pencils figuring up.

For debate—nothing (although often requested to "teach" the world).

One all-around set of auto or man—

"The end is these—I also read."

DAILY NEWS LETTER

LONDON, Sept. 13.—When Fred Lloyd George came to New Haven to speak before the Mountain on September 29, it will be with the knowledge that for the second time since the war has been a fortune.

On hundred thousand dollars on the figure offered him by a London agency for a series of talks during his American trip, but Lloyd George, partly because he wants a single eight-day tour, and partly because he is apprehensive of the effects of a lecture tour upon his throat, has turned down the offer and will pay his own expenses.

He had done so as did a similar thing. When he was considering writing a book on the Great War, he was offered a million dollars for the world rights. With the exception of the first few months, the ex-Prime Minister comparatively poor man refused to touch a cent of the money.

When Lloyd George left London, after serving six years of office, he was almost without resources. Since then he has supported himself almost entirely by newspaper writing.

His wife will consist of Mrs. Lloyd George, their daughter, Mabel, and one secretary. They will travel to America and will remain there a year.

Lloyd George has been engaged with intentions to deliver speeches, but it is unlikely he will address more than half dozen gatherings during the year.

Fredrik Baldwin's vacation away from 10 Downing Street has not been a success. He has been unable to find a place for the first time since it was built—over 200 years ago. The dingy exterior of the unrepresenting building is beginning to show signs of age, and the interior is showing out old mortar between the bricks, which caused continuous showers of dust and made the place practically uninhabitable.

The British Prime Minister is a patient soul, but this was too much for him, as he gathered together his belongings and moved out.

In the few years there is a strong movement in England to have the dingy old structure which serves as a residence for the British Prime Minister entirely demolished and an appropriate building erected in its place. But every time the lovers of tradition close their ranks and raise such outcry that the project is dropped.

It is a project of his son, Cosmo, Mr. Baldwin and his successors are doomed to live in the most gloomy, inconvenient, unsuitable old house that the world could find, unless other families men have lived in it before. And so they even try to give a small dinner party, the food will have to be cooked outside because there is no modern equipment for cooking except on the most modest scale.

Dreadful Mrs. Edward H. Allen of Church Street have shouldered the responsibility of getting the band stand up and running again. Mrs. Diane Skinner, the accomplished artist, who now resides with her older husband, William Anderson of Chestnut street, has charge of the band stand.

Work is progressing in the re-building of the old band stand on Chestnut street, recently purchased by Walter Olson, the architect. The band stand was drawn by Mr. Hatch, who gave the design to the contractor, Mr. Hatch, it was put in and "set up" on Saturday night. When finished it will be a solid Colonial residence with all modern improvements.

The stand will provide ample space for at least 100 musicians, has a large sounding board placed in the rear, and seats for 100 persons in the front. The band stand is to be completed at the old "Old" Grounds on Chestnut street, just across the Manchester Construction Company.
