HARVARD-YALE ROW TODAY IS GRID "CLASSIC"

Ancient Fend to Be Reborn in Massive Bowl When Crimson Meets Blue—Means Much This Year

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 24.—Modern protagonists of an ancient feud, Harvard and Yale will meet in the hollow of the Harvard Stadium this afternoon in the ultimate classic of the football season as it has been played throughout the world—the gridiron game.

Harvard and Yale, the oldest and youngest of American sports, the last word in athletic competition by right of tradition. Although it is the oldest sport on earth, it has a youthfulness of about 45,000 years.

This season Harvard Yale football means more to an athletic team than it has since the early post-Haughton days at Cambridge. The Crimson, true enough, has no need to beat the Blue to establish its position as a national power, and only only pull out all the stops to win.

Harvard and Yale have been playing football since 1862, and only only pull out all the stops to win.

The second game was also a close one. In this game, Bob Howitzer, the star player, played the most brilliant game since he came to Cambridge.

Fredal Tenner in Channel Islands. In the Channel Islands (those small British possessions in the English channel between England and France), many laws and customs of the Middle Ages are still retained. The ancient charters framed nearly a thousand years ago by the kings of Normandy still remain largely in force, and much of the land is held under the same old system of tenure that existed in feudal days.

One tenant for instance, still owes his landlord one donkey every year, and a cake made from a bushel of wheat. Another is required to pay 18 rees, or about one bushel long. These and many other curious survivals testify to the days when the Channel Islands were part of ancient Normandy, whose ruler, William the Conqueror, became ruler of England. Two broods of blooded cattle, known as the Jersey and the Guernsey, come from islands of the Channel group with those respective names.

How a Mother and Son Were Provided for. YEARS ago a man came to this country as an immigrant. He built up a large business, and left an estate of millions to his widow and son.

The estate was wisely left in trust with a trust company. As it turned out, the son, without financial experience but a desire for large income, insisted on many occasions that the trustee sell certain sound investments and purchase securities of very high yield but doubtful character.

The trust company refused to make the exchanges. It explained its position courteously and painstakingly, with the result that the beneficiaries now realize how valuable the trustee's service has been to them.

In your own case, it may be most advisable for you to consider the appointment of a trust company as trustee for care for all or a part of the estate you will leave.
