that the life of legalized boxing soon may be burning very low at Albany, the National Sports Alliance is about to institute a membership drive with the idea of swinging varied influence into line behind the movement to offset the efforts of the reformers. The alliance originally was conceived as an association of boxers, managers, promoters, referees, seconds and "lovers of athletic sports."

To Broaden Scope, It is now proposed by Jimmy Johnston, new president of the organization that its scope be broadened to include membership of those identified with professional sport of all kinds. In this way, boxing would be accorded considerable outside support and from financially distinterested parties, Meantime, an investigation into the case of Frankie Jerome whose tragic death as the result of a bout at Madison Square Garden has served to crystalize sentiment in some quarters against boxing will be conducted today by the District Attorney's office. The investigation is regarded as a formality in view of the fact that the boxer's death has been established as an unfortunate accident.

Klondiker Who Left Manch ester Writes He is Well am Happy in High Sierras of California—Daily News Letter Sent Him On December 29 Gets Ouick Renly Still Trying to Make "Home Stake"-Recalls Severa Local Persons.

Jerry Dwyer, former Manchester resident and a memper of the Manchester Klondike party that left here January 24, 1898, to seek gold in the Alaska River country from whom no word has been received for the past 25 years, has been positively located by the Manchester Daily News hrough a magazine article published fast month which told of an old Alaskan "sour-dough" named "Jerry Dwyer," a picturesque figure who was persuaded to bring his dog-team to Southern California, there to carry the mail across Kaiser Range to the camps of the marooned tunnel workers on the Florence Lake project who spend their winters behind miles of drifted snow.
