MARKING CITIZENS
 The News comments to the citizenship of all cities where courts naturalize citizens the work that is being done in Brooklyn. Reference has frequently been made by this paper to the impressive and significant work that marks the admission of aliens to citizenship in "The City of Churches." This is not only a commendable and dignified, but a regular thing—a definite program. The work has been carefully worked out. It works well, too, and is attracting attention throughout the entire country. Readers of The News undoubtedly are familiar with the court ceremony attending the naturalization of citizens. If they are not, it wouldn't hurt them any to drop in at a naturalization session. It is an interesting and more interesting than many have to believe.

It remains, however, for the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce to make the naturalization ceremony not only impressive and dignified, but to give to the citizen a sense of civic pride. It is not only a citizen an impression that he's not likely to forget. In addition to the dignity and impressiveness, there's an effect that's going to wear off the moment the newly made citizen leaves the court room. Brooklyn's method deserves emulation. A similar ceremony will be adopted in all our naturalization courts. It's better for all concerned if we can create in the minds and hearts of the newly made citizens something more than a perfunctory interest. Giving them some thing to remember on the day they receive their citizenship and welcome such as they have received in Brooklyn is a fine thing from every standpoint.

In addition to the attention to the words of the judge, there might well be a brief address by some layman befitting this important epoch in the lives of these people. And we cannot too highly commend the Brooklyn plan of presenting to each citizen a copy of the Constitution and a flag. These are supplied, we are told, by prominent women of Brooklyn. This should help to bring the alien into "appreciation of the heritage which is laid before him." As an exchange remains to be made, it is not merely lessons in English and civics that are required to fit him to take on the name and function of an American citizen. The majesty of the state must find and kindle a majesty in the soul of every citizen.

These words are true. And some of our native-born citizens will do well to ponder them. They need a rebirth of this spirit.

POSTAL WORKERS' PAY
 The public generally is getting excitedly behind the bill introduced in Congress to increase the salaries of letter carriers and postal clerks. Salary grab bills, as a rule, especially in these days, do not deserve much consideration. This bill, however, isn't a salary grab bill. It's a bill that's both fair and just, that makes some pretense to give postal workers their rights. It is no secret that these men have been underpaid that their salaries have not risen with the rising cost of living. They do not begin to get what they earn and what they are worth. It's all right to begin to practice economy, but to underpay postal workers is not true governmental economy. It's false economy, as is trying to reduce the post office force to a minimum and let the public get along the best it can. The post office department should see to it without delay that the post offices of the country have sufficient force of postal workers to properly do the business of the office. And the force of postal workers should get living wages. There ought not to be any question concerning any bill that aims to bring this about. And there should be no question. It is legislation that's needed in the interests, not alone of the workers on the inside and outside of the post offices, but in the interests of efficient postal service. Underpaid postal workers are a liability, because they are invariably present to meet their obligations, and consequently become discontented and dissatisfied. The laborer is worthy of his hire at all times and wherever he may be. The post office laborer is no exception to the rule. Such a rule in the postal service is bound to work well.

and wear well. The News, while not given to every grab bill in these times, with living costs soaring because of high taxes, cannot too strongly commend the bill that seeks to give more of a punch and a little more of the Butler "pep" to the postal workers of this country which they so clearly entitled. In taking a stand on this public issue, it is safe to say that no large American city has had an experience similar to Philadelphia these days. It is safe to say that Philadelphia is cleaner than it was. Whether the experiment will prove a permanent success it's quite another matter. General Butler isn't going to remain there all his life, nor is Mayor Kendrick likely to remain on the job for an indefinite period. The citizenship of Philadelphia must do its duty if Philadelphia is to be kept clean and safe.

DAILY NEWS LETTER
 San Francisco, Feb. 7.—Titles of present-day song hits are no more weird than those of half a century ago. That is the contention of Thomas F. Boyle, San Francisco, who in his heyday as a singer in 1920. For the information of our townspeople, who of whom ought to be interested in this matter. The News would call attention to the provisions of this bill. The minimum is $1,000, with an annual increase of $200 to $2,000. After three years there is a clause of promotion to grades paying $2,500 and $2,600. Can any of our readers tell us if a better or more businesslike method to promote all around efficiency? We know of none.

PHILADELPHIA'S CLEANUP AND "COPS"
 Mayor Kendrick of Philadelphia is different from a great many of the mayors of large American municipalities. On this is certain, he doesn't like politics, and the politicians of Philadelphia are not having very great success in lugging him in. In fact, he doesn't like to be in politics. He's not a politician. He's a policeman. He's a man who's going to wear of the moment the newly made citizen leaves the court room. Brooklyn's method deserves emulation. A similar ceremony will be adopted in all our naturalization courts. It's better for all concerned if we can create in the minds and hearts of the newly made citizens something more than a perfunctory interest. Mathematics and economics are not in popularity, while a number of professors are enrolled to study correctional and reform education. "Longings and ambitions extend to prisoners' careers and the reactions in prison life were to fill the work with rare interest," said Dr. Smithson. "Some of the men turn to religion and write diatribes against those who do not believe. Others become advocates of blue laws, and a few blame the cigarette as the prime cause of all crime."

When the Boom Parted
 By AUSTIN WENT
 The end had come. And yet the men who will go to take a great risk with their lives. This question is for the expert, not the layman, decide.

EDITOR'S LETTER BOX

ANNEXATION IN THE ARCTIC
 Secretary Denby's testimony before the Naval Affairs committee of the House throws new light on the purposes of the Shenandoah's proposed Arctic trip. The object of this expedition is to reach the North Pole. The men on the ship are to be a team of men, and they are to be a team of men.

TURKISH HAREM FAR FROM DEFUNCT
 Philadelphia, Feb. 7.—Three with bigamous tendencies perhaps will be interested in the fact that the Turkish harem is not a defunct institution as the "new freedom" movement might lead to "foreigners" to believe. In fact, well-dressed harems, according to Julius C. Napier, a Greek, who stopped off on his return from a lecture tour in Australia, are still a very desirable adjunct to the households of those Turks whose station and money, or just money, enable them to "foot the bill."

YALE CLUB ONCE BRITISH HOSPITAL
 New Haven, Conn., Feb. 7.—Dances and dinners, tea fights and lectures abound today in an ancient house on Elm street, in the historic New Haven, that in 1777 was a British hospital. One of the historic houses of Connecticut, the structure has been turned over for use by the Yale Faculty Club and with just enough improvements to make the place comfortable, seems likely to be preserved for the future.
