The forner distinguished Secretary of the freasury, who figures, with many ther prominent figures, in the oipriferous oil sensation, after making a good impression before the Senate committee on oil leases, doesn't know just where he is at. He goes back on the policy of selfdetermination and puts the quesion of whether he shall remain in the presidential race on other houlders. In other words, he has called a national conference of democrats for Feb. 18, in Chicago. Mr. McAdoo's supporters, rather than Mr. McAdoo, will determine the issue. He sidesteps the personat and paramount question of presidential availability. It's up to the conference new and the conference, we are told, will consist of representatives of labor, farmers and "ether liberals." Some see in this conference a shrewd move on Mr. McAdoo's part." Others see all kinds of things. It all depends of the viewpoint. Some distinguished Democrats are unkind enough to prefer charges against Mr. Mc-Adoo. No, they are not serious charges. It appeared he was to elected president tomorrow, and bad been one of her beaux before whisker or to grow another until they were married. The impudence of the thing paralyzed Allan, He watched them drive off together in "We'll have to clect him." said the car.

He spent a miserable evening.
For the life of him he couldn't understand Alice's motives. Surely she was going to settle down some time. The hours crept by. It was midnight before he heard the car drive up to the house.

Young Hope.

"Oh, don't be funny about it."
Laura sobbed. I hate you. There!

Take that!"

And into young Hope's face flashed his diamond solitaire.

midnight before he heard the car drive up to the house.

Then came the ring at the bell. Alice and Henderson appeared, and after a few brief exchanges, he went away. Alice came in.

She looked white and ifred as she faced her husband. "Well, Alian, I've had my fling; I'm willing to settle down now," she said.

Something in her look alarmed him. "Why, Alice, what is it?"

"Nothing. I—I've' had my fling, that's ail." she said, and suddenly burst into tears. "Oh, Alian," she whispered, as he put his arms about her, "don't you understand? I—we—I'll have to settle down now."

"And I've got a mind of my own, too," sobbed Laura, "and I'll nevet make up with you as long as father wears one whisker."

Young Hope went away in a meloncholy frame of mind. But the following day Cy, lying groaning in bed, fingering his whisker, in the presence of his wife, was astounded by Hope's bursting into his sick room.

"Hooray!" yelled Hope. "Your man's elected president."

"What?" shouted the sick man.

"Read," answered Hope lacontently, thrusting the latest issue of the Owl before him.
