Shouldn't prosperity mean more than the thought "Will it last," than an opportunity for extravagance and dissipation, than a respite from worldly care?

Adversity discloses vast natural differences in men. Prosperity develops vast artificial differences between men. Many are glad to seize the fruits that fall from the cornucopia of prosperity that they may eat, drink and be merry. Others seize the fruits and store them away never to be enjoyed. But the wise welcome the bounteous gifts of prosperity and use them neither in extravagance nor parsimony. These latter are called thrifty.

HERMAN BRONKIE Ford Sawyer, a sport writer on The Boston Globe, writing under "Baseball Birthday Sketches" last Sunday had the following to say regarding Herman Bronkie: "Herman Bronkie, former major league infielder, was a pitcher in the old Connecticut League about 18 years ago, and he was a mighty good one, too. In 1906 he won 14 games and lost a like number, while twirling for Hartford and Waterbury, and the next season la. captured more than two-thirds of his contests as a Waterbury box artist. He also worked in the outfield that year and batted 274. The following season, he alternated between the outer-gardens and the hurling hill, and in 1909 he turned to infield duty, leading the third-
