"Them New Styles From Paris'

Did you read what some Parisian style designer wants to make out of our women folk?

Yep, she says that the ladies, to be considered really fashionable this summer, must adapt her latest creation-namely, the wearing of big WINGS on the back of their dresses. Wings made so they fold up against the wearer when she is sitting down or standing and when "walking or running they give the impression of a flitting bird."

Oh, sweet angel cake! She might have added a tin halo and a harp as necessary auxiliaries and made the outfit more complete.

A young man calling on his "sweetie"said "sweetie" wearing a "winged" gownwould have her guessing if he handed her that old line-"My, you look perfectly divine." The first thing she would do would be to pinch herself to see if she were still alive.

And wouldn't it be grand to go to a theater or cabaret and have some fair damsel with a pair of wind jammers come flitting out in front of the footlights, singing-"Yes, we have no bah-nan-naws, etc."

Then too, you would see a lot of fun if some rather plump woman got on a crowded street car or bus, forgetting to "close her wings." the time she reached her destination, she would look like something that dropped out of the clouds with a splash.

What a fine looking sight would greet you if you peeked in on some of our ultra-fashionable afternoon bridge parties-see the money changing hands and all the "angels" smoking

Of course, those "winged" dresses would make appropriate uniforms for a good many of those chronic reformers, the people who mind everybody else's business but their own. You know the kind-anti-gum chewing ,anti-grape

Think of a poor married man, coming home after a hard day's toil, and having his wife surprise him,-garbed in winged costume. He probably would make a dive for her life insurance papers without asking any questions.

Still, if that same married man were addressing his stenographer as "My Angel" just when friend wife happened into the office-

It is the business of public to any compromise which can be at the sides, requires as much monwide road, traffic is scattered, and wear is distributed. With a paved surface sufficiently wide for two lines of rapidly moving vehicles to pass in safety, the necessity for artificial shoulders is eliminated. To build a narrow road, thin and without shoulders, means a loss of the entire investment in a comparatively short time. A narrow right of way requires drainage ditches close to the travel. With no shoulder between paved surface and ditch the chances of serious accident are largely increased. All drainage ditches tend to become deeper, so that the danger to traffic becomes constantly

Before any program for beautification of highways is undertaken, some assurance that the rights of way are wide enough to accomodate future traffic should be had. Motor vehicle traffic will increase as the mileege of hard roads increases. A general extension in the width of wearing surfaces will call for wider rights of way. To obtain wider rights of way now means an ultimate saving of a large sum of money and will prevent many future difficulties.
