A SAFETY FIRST NUMBER

The Safety Institute of New York is sending out warnings in the form of advice to parents everywhere that the season is upon them demanding extra watchfulness over the conduct of their children, especially those of the more tender years. Of an approximate 20,000,000 children given liberty by the end of the school term, the Safety Institute estimates that 5,000 will be killed and 100,000 suffer injuries of varying severity during the vacation period. These figures are based upon the ratio of other years, and in the (Copyright, 1924, by the McClure strike is certainly presaged by the Persons whose birthdate it is Members N. Y. THE MODERN GIRL

A British critic of the modern girl accuses her of lack of intelligence and shortage in knowledge of life's affairs. here may be many counts against the girl of today, but if hearsay is to be accepted, those listed by the English critic are not among them. The modern girl has an intelligence that staggers those reared in the old school. She is quick to learn from jazz to the classics, and knows how to make the most of opportunity. As for the affairs of life, if there is one line along which she has knowledge it is that. She knows more of life and its affairs in a minute than did her grandnother in a year. There may be some life affairs that the nodern girl doesn't know, but no one knows that she doesn't

CHANGING BASIC LAW

A pending constitutional amendment would require at least one branch of a state legislature to have been elected ubsequent to the submission to the legislature of a proposed mendment to the Constitution of the United States. The plan would empower the state to refer proposed amendments to the people and would enable them to elect state reprentatives who would obey their will with respect to rati-

This change seems to be an improvement upon existing ditions. The history of constitutional amendments indiates that organized minorities may be able to effect ratification in legislatures against the will of the unorganized ajority. At any rate, that allegation has been made, and it is worth while to make consummation of such injustice impossible. The people should always have opportunity to study proposed changes of their basic law and to make their will effective through their legislatures.

5. Billy and Floppy couldn't decide who should go into the pirate's cave, so Uncle Wiggily said: "I'll countrout." He counted: "Eenle meenle, minie mo! Into the cave you must go!" And the count came to Floppy Not liking it very much, the pig boy went into the cave. But, all of a sudden he came running out again. "Oh, there's a big black pirate in there!" he cried. "He threw a rock at me!"

6. Uncle Wiggily and Billie were surprised to see Floppy come out of the cave in such a hurry. "Are you fooling, Floppy, or did you really see a pirate in there?" bleated the goat. "I saw something big and black!" grunted the pig boy. "Aw, I don't care! I'm not afraid of anything black! I'm going in!" bleated Billie. While Uncle Wiggily stood ready to help, and Floppy hid, Billie went in—and came out!

8. 'You hadn't better go in that cave, Uncle Wiggly!" grunted Floppy "No! Stay out!" begged Billie. "Nonsense!" cried the brave rabbit. "I'll capture the pirates! But you boys had better move off a little way. Something may happen." Uncle Wiggly marched boldly into the pirate's cave. Soon out came a shower of rocks, gravel, sticks and leaves. "Something is happening all right!" grunted Floppy.

9. All of a sudden there was a howl and a growl inside the cave. "I guess that's the end of Uncle Wigglly!" sadly said Floppy. "Yes, the pirate has him!" bleated Billie. But, the next moment, out of the cave came marching the Bob Cat and Bear, tied together. Behind them came brave Captain Uncle Wiggily. "The Squiggle Bugs tickled the bad chaps and I fied them up!" laughed the rabbit. "Hurray!"
