President Coolidge, in his address opening the observance of Better Homes Week, did well to emphasize the spiritual as well as the material side of the subject. It goes without asying that a home that is comfortable and attractive contributes to the happiness of those who occupy it. Those back of the movement which is taking on extra activities this work, are rendering a most important service in promoting the deutation of the people as to the type of homes which should be built and the manner in which they should be more practical philanthropy than the building of comfortable and attractive houses to be sold or rented at moderate prices. After paying a tribute to those who are trying to meet the demand for better houses, the president impresses that in the accomplishment of this an important set poil to the work of the well-being of the nation. The American home is the source of our National well-being. In it our high traditions of services and integrity are fostered. From the home there migrate respect for the rights of others and the habit of co-operating for worthy ends. Through sharing its common enterprises and common sacrifices the child develops that sturdiness of character which distinguishes the manhood and womanhood of our land.

Thus we are reminded that home-builders are not alone those whose materials are wood, mrick, stone and marble.
