Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, sought bone-dry enforcement by prohibiting the exhibition of "wet" scenes in the moving picture theaters and in an unsuccessful attempt to abolish the sacred American search warrant. The president of the National Editorial Association has addressed his association to the effect that the "wholesale lack of respect for the law can be blamed in part upon the newspapers." In the same strain is the suggestion by an eastern editor that the press can enforce prohibition by refusing to publish "wet" jokes.

It is not infrequently that the public assumes that newspapers, if not responsible for the world's ills, can easily cure them by refusing to mention them.
