THE RADIO PRIMER ONE DAILY FACT FOR LISTENERS

Long Trains of Radio Waves are what characterise modern radio. Remember the water waves on the pond that we told about in the Primer four days ago. If you touch the pond once there will be only one wave. If you touch the pond several times in succession there will be a "train" of waves, one wave following close behind the other. similarly, if you have ever been on the open sea you must have noticed that the waves of the ocean come in the same way. one after the other. A long train of waves extends in both directions as far as you can see. Radio waves are like this too electrons in it into vibration (as we told you in yesterday's Primer). It is a long train of radio waves that does this. They keep the electrons in vibration, just as the waves of the codan keep a ship bobbing up and down every instant as long as it is at sea at all.

The broadcasting wave that rose out from a radio station is "continuous wave." The engi-neers call modern radio broad-casting "continuous wave trans-mission." or, sometimes, "C. W. transmission." Now you will know what these expressions mean when you find them in ra-
