and the seek increased, out it has been increased, that it has been the seek eat of successful operation of railroads to preserve near an even rate for all rather than have some excessively fast trains, because guarding the safety of such makes other trains slower than they otherwise need be.

Leomotives are larger and stronger than when records were made and probably could go as fast as anything in the past, but in the integest of safety they are not let, out. The design now is to know not how fast they can go, but how fast will safety permit them to go. The taking of chances on speed are left to other forms of loomotion. Thus 100 years of experience in railroading has taught that it does not pay to go to fast, that there is a mean speed which makes for common of operation as well as safety.

However, the railway loomotive has ceased to be a syn own for speed. The airplane has robbed it of the distinction. The record of 18s miles an hour for a plane is so far ahead of anything possible on the earth that there are no contestants with, they sirreraf for the honor of being the past that there is a firm it in an travel. Because the training of the past in the safety of the control in air travel, though it would seem to be rapid enough to meet the demands of the most ardent speed if early the production is any form of travel is wisest, and it is to be hoped that the examples of the railroads in being satisfied not to attack recomb already established will be intrinsed by others, whatever they hamsener of their vehicle, whose present ambition is to punch holes in the air at a faster rate than has hithered been done.
