WHO SUPPORTS THESE SCHOOLS?
Who is footing the bill for "free" education in the United States? The Institute for Public Service reports the results of some research into the question of teachers' salaries, which, in the light of present economic conditions, should be re-examined.

There are, says the report, 18 colleges in the United States which are paying full professors less than $2,000 a year, while 140 pay not more than $3,000. For instructors, eight colleges pay less than $1,000, while 61 pay not over $1,500.

Conservation has always been characteristic of academic institutions. Such salaries are doubtless a survival from the not so remote period when $1,000 was regarded by the professors of young people fitting themselves for the teaching profession as a prize to be striven for. In those days a professor who received annually $2,500 was able to travel to Europe and research during his vacations and to be in tolerable comfort the rest of the year.

But to pay men learning and influence the meager salaries indicated by the above casts upon any community the reproach of indifference to its highest interests. The low tuition, too, put upon either the community or the student body the reproach of getting something for nothing; it raises the question, who pays for free education? And the only conclusion must be that by lack of support the student body tax the college faculty to pay the just costs of the institutions.

Tuition rates, public subscriptions and other means of support should be made adequate to pay the men and women who give their lives to the work of teaching, living wages, an income in keeping with the honor and dignity of their position in society.

A TRAFFIC NUISANCE
Without advocating an addition to our already too voluminous statute books, one can express his abhorrence of, and disgust with, those poor impatient motorists who immediately traffic is held up cause a deafening din with their electric horns.

There is nothing more futile than trying to untangle a traffic jam by the honk of a horn. In fact the confusion thus arising can not but increase the congestion and cause further unnecessary delay to the "honkers" themselves.

If some motorists enjoy displaying in this way their bad tempers and childish lack of patience there are innumerable pedestrians, motor motorists, residents and workers who are annoyed almost beyond endurance by this wholly unnecessary addition to the noises of the street. The necessary and unavoidable traffic noises call for no assistance from the unthinking.

Traffic policemen and crossing watchmen are not accustomed to deliberately block traffic and increase the congestion. The driver of the stalled automobile is not going to be a victim of horns. And the driver of the car ahead is just as anxious to be on the move as the tangleman fellow at the end of the line of traffic.

The fellow who blows his horn in a traffic tie-up is the same undesirable citizen who forces his way into the head of the line at the ticket office, who crowds his way into the street car and doesn't want to be a gentleman because of the responsibility involved.

SIGNS WITHOUT END
All of the countless signs and sign boards encountered along the motor highways detract from the beauty of the scenery, but not all of them are without advantage to even the tourist sightseer.

There is a valuable message as well as honesty wit in the following specimens from the official signboards of our highways:

"This is a good road. It will cost you money to burn it up."
"Drive slow and see our city. Drive fast and see our jail."
"Slow down. Look before you leap."
"Don't crowd your neighbor's side of the road."
"Slow Look—and Live."
"Don't speed. It is 'Good Morning, Judge,' here as hereafter."

Unfortunately, these signs are for those motorists who habitually drive too fast to read them or to be annoyed by the more unsightly advertising poster boards. To the careful driver these conventional signs are as the "word to the wise" and a protection against accident and speed cops.

Highway advertising signs have become a problem. They mar the natural beauty of the roadside, obstruct the vision of drivers and detract attention from the roadway. Index boards or direction signs are invaluable but generally apply where most needed. Speed signs and "drive cautiously" warnings are also hard to find. But the unsightly and vision-obscuring advertising poster boards are ubiquitous.

State and federal highway departments, public officials and automobile associations are to be commended for steps they have taken recently toward the provision of more and better direction, mileage and warning signs and the curtailing and regulation of roadside advertising signboards. Limiting the size and distance from the highways of these latter signs was a step forward.

Astrologists read this as rather an unlucky day. Uranus and Venus manifestly be spoiled unless he has patience. Bahadranath Tagore says: "The power of music or of money has opportunities of immediate satisfaction, but the power of an ideal must have infinite patience."
The man who enlists under the banner of the ideal shall never see victory. For in idealism there is no victory, only betterment.
Because ideals come to fruition by growth.
The God of this world is a gardener. He is not an architect.
The Idealist has become God's partner, for he has glimpsed a great truth, and every truth is a programme of duty.
God, it has been said, does not pay every Saturday night. Hence there is no reward for the Idealist, no goal, no limit of triumph.
The only reward he can have is the joy of his efforts, the thrill of self-giving, the angels' joy of knowing that the thing he champions is eternal and cannot fail.

ADVERTISE IN THE NEWS
The time-honored theory that a wife votes as her husband has been finally expunged at least in the Pottam family. Both W. R. and Mrs. Pottam, Augusta, Me., had voted at the Democratic convention. Pottam had calmly looked and, seeing as her husband's alternate while he was on the stand, voted against the plank he was presenting, proving that a woman may cling to her political convictions in spite of her husband's attitude.
